Columbia University

Sally Findley, Ana Abraído-Lanza, and Vincent Guilamo-Ramos, co-convenors

Location: Room 304, School of Social Work (Amsterdam, at 122nd)

- 9-9:30 Welcome and coffee
- 9:30-9:45 What is this all about: The Center for Population, Health, and Society of Columbia University (Co-Directors Irv Garfinkel and Connie Nathanson)
- 9:45-10 Round robin introductions: Describe your migration research with 4 key words (A. Abraído-Lanza leads)
- 10 – 11 Roundtable discussion of Migration Research at CU (V. Guilamo-Ramos leads)
- Looking at your research over the past 5-10 years, which study do you think has had the most impact in terms of shaping migration-related policies or programs?
 - Considering that immigration is a truly global phenomenon, how can your particular research (with whatever migration stream it includes) inform the ongoing dialogue on immigrant rights, policies, and regulations?
 - If funding were not an issue, what would be the priority topics that you would pursue in the next five years? What would you hope to achieve with that research?
 - What type of assistance should a Center for Population, Health & Society provide to researchers to assist them in developing their program of research on immigrant health issues?
- 11-11:50 How do we move towards working together: Conversation around one or more of the talking points or beginning to identify a possible collaborative research project (e.g. analysis of the New Immigrant Survey 2003) (S. Findley, leads)
- 11:50-12:00 From here to there or Next Steps (Ana, Vince, and Sally)
- 12- 1:00 Lunch over more conversation about next steps
